

THE KWAJALEIN HOURGLASS

An American Soldier of the 7th Infantry Division stands on Nob (now Echo) Pier surveying the destruction on Kwajalein after the battle. On his back is a Marshallese woven bag. This week marks the 63rd anniversary of Operation Flintlock — the battles for Roi, Namur and Kwajalein. Special coverage begins on Page 3.

Ebeye resident would like more community pride

By Agnes Jibke

What is a community? According to the Random House Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, a community is "a social group of any size whose members reside in a specific locality, share government, and often have a common cultural historical heritage." In asking this question I would like each of us to think about our community, our home, beliefs and society. Since it's a new year, a time for closing and opening new chapters in each of our lives, it wouldn't hurt to unselfishly form a new year's resolution not for ourselves, but for our community as a whole. I know there is much to be done within our home (Ebeye), but if we were to take tiny baby steps and attend to it with care and confidence, things will gradually change.

So please let's make a difference, mok. Have you noticed and compared Ebeye's surroundings to Kwaj? I have, and although we are a long way from beautifying our home, we can do it little by little. First, we need to act like responsible citizens and conduct ourselves using the same ethical behavior and actions on Ebeye as we do here on Kwaj. I've asked myself time and time again 'why is it that we know not to litter on Kwaj and yet we do it on Ebeye (same rules apply)?' Is it because law enforcement is weak on Ebeye? Is it because there aren't as many trash bins around? Or is because you don't really care? Whatever your reasoning is, it has to be adjusted. Like I said, we need to act as a community in attending to our home and its surroundings.

Just thought I would point out the littering problem to you, my fellow neighbors and workers, to think about.

OPERATION FLINTLOCK

Jan. 30-Feb. 5, 1944

Four-day battle liberated Kwajalein Atoll from Japanese, opened Central Pacific for push to Japanese home islands

The situation

Aerial reconnaissance photo of the north end of Kwajalein taken on Jan. 30, 1944, in preparation for the troop landings.

Hourglass reports

Through 1942 and most of 1943 during World War II, the Central Pacific was relatively quiet.

The great naval battle of Midway had been won by the Americans and the campaigns of Papua, Guadalcanal and New Guinea had raged in the Southwest Pacific.

The Imperial Japanese navy and Japanese merchant ships roamed the Central Pacific at will.

Japanese garrisons throughout Micronesia built airstrips, submarine bases and prepared defenses. The small islands of the central Pacific would threaten American supply lines and communications with air and submarine attacks.

American war planners decided that the main push to the Japanese home islands would go through the Gilberts, the Marshalls, the Marianas and the Carolines. The Japanese bases had to be eliminated.

In late 1943, Admiral Chester Nimitz proposed taking an atoll that was deep within the perimeter of the Japanese held islands in Micronesia. Most of his officers thought it was too risky to go so deep in Japanese territory. But Nimitz wanted that atoll. It had the world's largest lagoon and would make a great staging base for future operations. The atoll that Nimitz wanted to take was Kwajalein.

The Japanese expected attack in the Marshalls and had heavily fortified all of their bases at Wotje, Maloelap, Mili, Jaluit, Kwajalein, Roi and Namur.

The U.S. 7th Infantry Division and the Marine 4th Division would face almost 10,000 Japanese soldiers and sailors who had vowed to die for their emperor and their country.

The landings

When U.S. Soldiers and Marines hit the beaches of Kwajalein, Roi and Namur, they were backed by a massive naval and air bombardment designed to knock out Japanese fortifications.

Near Roi and Namur, Navy ships laid a non-stop barrage of 2,655 tons of ammunition.

A regiment of 75 mm and 105 mm howitzers bombarded the defensive positions from five nearby islands.

Navy ships at Kwajalein fired some 7,000 shells into the island defenses on the morning of Feb. 1. This was in addition to the heavy bombardment days before the attack. Navy aircraft flew 96 sorties over Kwajalein before H-Hour.

Forty-eight 105 mm howitzers, along with several 155 mm howitzers, bombarded Kwajalein from nearby Carlson Island, firing more than 29,000 shells.

Marines landed on Roi and Namur beaches at 11 a.m. on Jan. 31, which was timed to coincide with the landing at Kwajalein. They faced relatively light resistance on Roi but much stronger defenses on Namur.

At Kwajalein, almost 1,200 Soldiers landed on the west end of the island without a casualty. Units advanced 1,800 yards up the island before the end of the day with only 17 dead and 46 wounded.

Men of the U.S. Seventh Infantry Division head to the landing area on Kwajalein.

Marines of the Fourth Marine Division land on Roi to light resistance.

Namur is pounded by naval gun fire and air bombardment to soften the defenses before Marines land.

A landing craft makes its way through the dense smoke of battle.

The combat

As U.S. troops advanced up the island of Kwajalein they faced stiffer resistance. The surviving Japanese had recovered from the heavy bombardments and began to organize a defense along the front lines using mortars and artillery. The Japanese also conducted fierce late night banzai counterattacks.

The fighting over the next three days quickly deteriorated into small unit actions, as American squads and teams fought snipers as well as overcoming heavily defended bunkers and buildings.

As troops neared what is now 'downtown,' they faced a whole complex of Japanese bunkers, machine gun nests and 'spider' holes, each fiercely defended.

On day three, shortly after sunset, Japanese made one last desperate banzai charge at American lines near what is now 6th Street. All the attackers were killed.

By the fourth day, U.S. troops advancing oceanside reached Bunker Hill, which was the end of the island at the time. At that point, organized resistance ceased, and a day of mop-up operations began.

When Roi fell, the Japanese moved back to well-prepared Namur. There, the fighting took a tragic turn as Marines mistakenly destroyed a blockhouse used as a storage building filled with torpedo warheads and aerial bombs. The explosion killed Japanese and Americans alike and filled the sky with towering, thick black smoke. The Marines' 2nd Battalion suffered more than half of its casualties in the single explosion.

Four Marines would receive Medals of Honor for their actions in the 24 hours of fighting on the two islands.

Images of war

Kwajalein is a scene of utter devastation at the end of the four-day battle for the island.

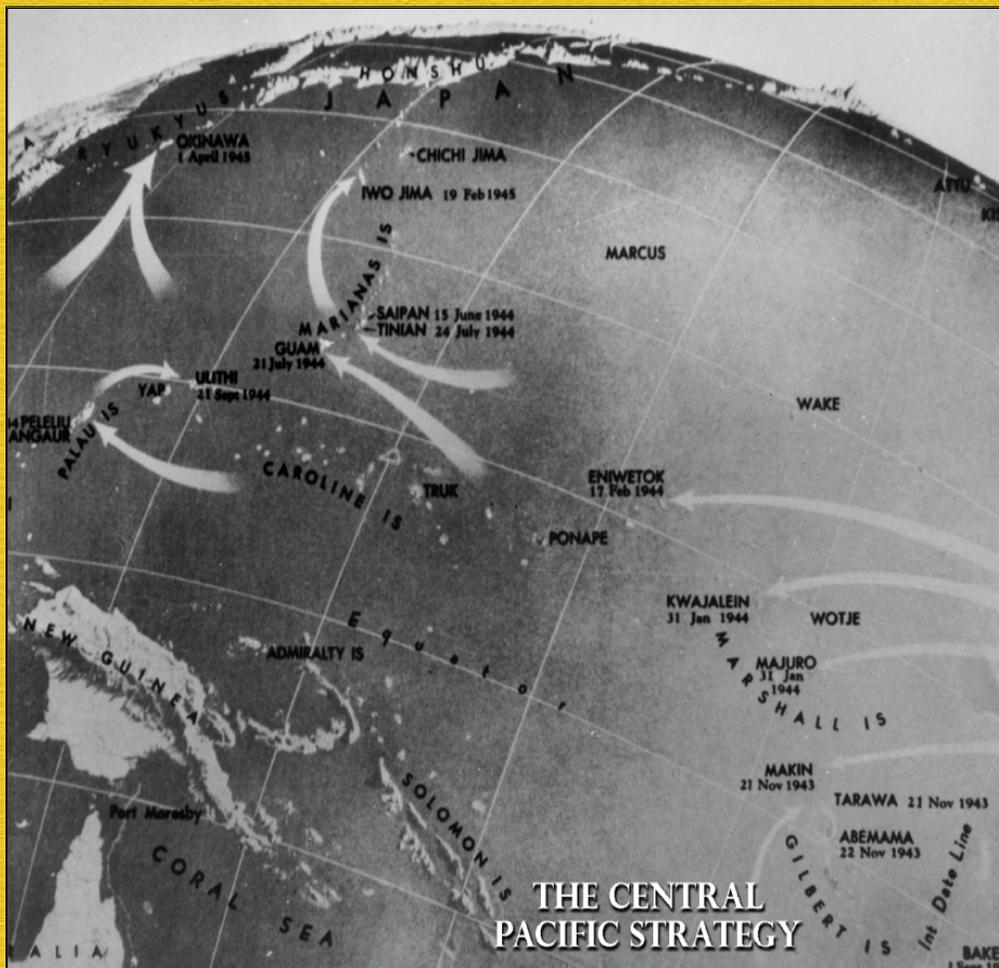

Japanese soldiers lay dead after a bloody banzai charge was repulsed near what is now 6th Street on Kwajalein. Japanese dead on Kwajalein were estimated at more than 4,900 with 207 taken prisoner and almost 3,500 on Roi and Namur with 51 prisoners taken.

Tank crews pause for rest near an aid station on Kwajalein during a brief lull in the battle.

Images of war

War in the central Pacific

Most of the Central Pacific Campaign took place in Micronesia, an area of the globe larger than the continental United States, where a multitude of islands lie scattered about a vast expanse of ocean. Clustered into four major groups, these Pacific islands have a landmass of about 1,200 square miles, an area somewhat larger than the state of Rhode Island. The most easterly of the four island groups are the Gilberts, low-lying coral atolls, straddling the equator just west of the international date line. North and west of the Gilberts are the Marshalls, a double chain of atolls, reefs, and islets, most of which rise only a few feet above sea level. Stretching almost due west from the Marshalls are the 550 tiny islands of the Caroline group. The Marianas lie just north of the Carolines in a 400-mile north-south chain. Strategically located across the main sea lines of communications between the United States and the Philippines, the islands of Micronesia played a vital role in Japanese war plans.

Soldiers with the 7th Infantry Division use a flame thrower on a Japanese position on Kwajalein. Most Soldiers carried rifles with bayonets and grenades, but strong defensive positions often called for satchel charges or other heavy demolition charges and flame throwers.

Marines on Namur check for snipers as fire comes from bombed out blockhouses and bunkers.

The wounded

On Kwajalein Island, 845 Americans were wounded in action.

The wounded were, when possible, evacuated to the rear of the lines, and then many were transported to Navy ships offshore and in the lagoon.

The troops took the greatest number of casualties on the second and third days after the invasion — 244 and 255 wounded, respectively — as they encountered stiff resistance in bunkers and heavily defended buildings.

Marines on Roi and Namur islands recorded 547 wounded in the 24 hours of action.

One Marine, Pfc. Richard Sorenson, was terribly wounded when he dove atop a grenade to save six comrades. He survived and received the Medal of Honor.

He was the only Medal of Honor recipient in the battle who lived.

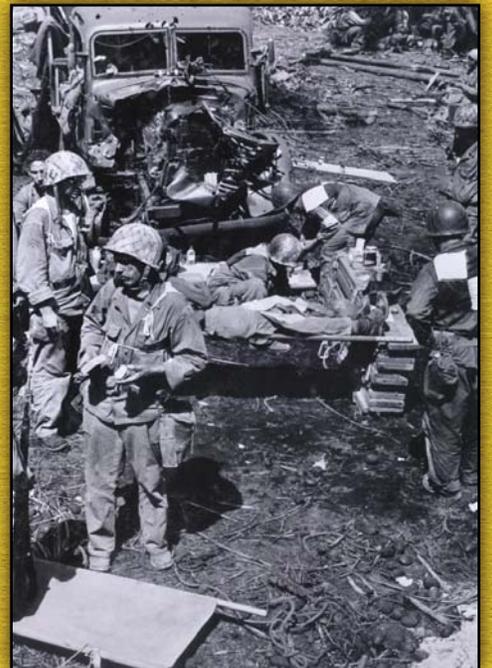

Soldiers of the 7th Infantry carry a wounded comrade on a stretcher through the desolate Kwajalein terrain.

Wounded are loaded onto boats for transport to a hospital ship.

A Navy corpsman attends to a Marine who has lost a hand in the battle.

Corpsmen are kept busy at an aid station on Namur.

The fallen

In the campaign for Kwajalein Atoll, U.S. forces lost less than one percent of their forces in casualties, a marvel of military history.

However, one percent casualties still translates into men killed in action.

On Kwajalein, the 7th Infantry Division had 142 dead and two missing in action. Estimates are the Japanese lost 4,938 dead with 206 more taken prisoner, including 127 Koreans.

On Roi and Namur islands, 190 Marines died. The enemy lost 3,472 dead along with 51 prisoners of war and 40 Korean laborers.

Of the Marines killed, three received Medals of Honor, including 1st Lt. John V. Power, Pfc. Richard B. Anderson and Lt. Col. Aquilla "Jimmie" Dyess.

Both Power and Dyess were killed leading attacks on enemy positions.

Dyess was killed leading an attack on Bunker Hill.

Above, Soldiers, Marines and Sailors attend a service for their fallen comrades on Kwajalein. Right, Marines on Roi fire a salute over the graves of fellow Marines.

Victory

The victory at Kwajalein Atoll could hardly have been more complete. The American victory marked the first time U.S. troops had taken pre-war Japanese territory and it established another key American base in the Central Pacific.

This presence helped lead to the isolation of the Bismarks, Solomons and New Guinea. Furthermore, many Japanese positions were bypassed as a result of the success at Kwajalein Atoll, allowing U.S. forces to concentrate on other targets including the successful assaults on the Philippines and Marianas.

The battles took advantage of the terrible lessons learned in the Tarawa invasion, and those lessons were used to minimize American casualties.

One can open up any number of books at any library and see combat photos. The photos of the battles of Kwajalein and Roi-Namur depict more than mere combat.

These are photos of the men who fought on the very land where we live, work and play. Some lived through the war. Some Marines and Soldiers display captured Japanese flags, swords, uniforms and other souvenirs taken during and after the battles on Kwajalein, Roi and Namur.

survived, but died on other islands. Many died on this ground. What those men did and endured on these islands should always be honored and remembered.

Janikowski earns certification in tropical medicine

Hourglass reports

Dr. John Janikowski of Kwajalein Hospital has obtained specialty certification in tropical medicine and travel health.

Physicians and other licensed health care professionals have a way to formally assess their knowledge in the specialty of tropical medicine and travel health. The American Society of Tropical Medicine and Hygiene has sponsored an examination leading to a Certificate of Knowledge in Clinical Tropical Medicine and Travelers' Health. ASTMH is one of the principal organizations worldwide that represents scientists and clinicians concerned with the prevention, treatment and control of tropical diseases.

The examination was given in Atlanta on Nov. 11. Licensed health care professionals can apply for the exam via one of two pathways: 1) Practice pathway – applicant must have five years practice experience in clinical tropical medicine and travelers' health; 2) Diploma course pathway – applicant must complete one of the ASTMH-approved courses of study in tropical medicine. Janikowski is a family practice physician at Kwajalein Hospital.

Dr. John Janikowski, a family practice physician at Kwajalein Hospital has earned a specialty certification in tropical medicine and travel health. Janikowski travelled to Atlanta to take the examination on Nov. 11.

Childers makes fall semester dean's list at Lee University

Hourglass reports

Barry Childers, a 2006 Kwajalein High School graduate, was named to the Dean's List at Lee University for the fall 2006 semester. Students with a semester grade point average of 3.7 or higher are named to the Dean's List.

Barry is the son of Jeff and Loretta Childers. His major is secondary education and according to his mother, he plans on teaching Social Sciences which includes History, Social Studies, Sociology, etc.

Lee University is a comprehensive four-year liberal arts university located in Cleveland, Tenn., about 25 miles north of Chattanooga. Founded in 1918, the accredited Christian university has an enrollment of more than 3,900 and offers degrees in 42 majors in more than 100 programs of study, as well as fourteen graduate programs.

HEAVY EQUIPMENT operations are planned at the Roi-Namur Small Boat Marina piers to remove accumulated fill material (sand/rubble). Based on available data, the dinoflagellate, gambierdiscus toxicus, is known to exist in sediment material around USAKA. This dinoflagellate carries the toxin that produces ciguatera, and the activity at the piers could intensify the potential for ciguatera contamination of fish stocks. Areas where dredging and/or filling activities are ongoing or have recently occurred should always be avoided for fish harvesting. Please avoid the Roi-Namur Small Boat Marina area for fishing and subsequent fish consumption until March 1.

Music students showcase results of hard work

With soccer season in full swing, after school activities for the winter season are keeping children and their parents on Kwajalein busy. High school students recently took semester exams and had their Winter Ball.

Elementary school youngsters are proving to be just as busy.

Thursday evening marked a 'Kwaj Kid' milestone for 5th graders at George Seitz Elementary School. The Beginning Band Premiere Concert, lasting 30 minutes, gave the students the chance to showcase the results of their hard work from the past few months.

Excitement was more than obvious on the faces of the audience as the children walked on the multi-purpose room stage dressed in their Sunday best. The beginner musicians didn't disappoint as they performed exceptionally for their family and friends. Proud fathers Glenn Hibberts and Jim Cossey had tripods in place to record the event.

Led by Dick Shields, who also conducts the junior/senior high band, parents and friends were treated to familiar tunes such as Hot Cross Buns, This Old Man, Old McDonald Had a Farm, Kum Ba Yah, as well as a delightful tuba solo of the Mexican Hat Dance. In honor of Thursday being bingo night, the students ended their concert with none other than B-i-n-g-o.

The instruments played included flutes, trombones, clarinets, trumpets, the oboe, and the tuba. Selections were played using all instruments, but one of the highlights of the concert included instrument solos such as the trumpet rendition of Symphony No. 9, and the flute rendition of Lullaby.

Shields thanked parents for their patience during the time he knew the young musicians had to practice playing their instruments at home. He then encouraged the audience to continue supporting band events such as the Community Band concert on Feb. 15, featuring adults on Kwaj, and the next 5th grade student concert in May.
